

Building up a bank of key trade skills

FOR more than 20 years, PEER VEET has been offering trades training and employment in the building, construction and related contracting industries in South Australia.

A registered training and group training organisation, PEER VEET was established in 1986 and now is one of the largest and most successful trades training groups in the state, employing more than 500 apprentices and trainees, chief executive Michael Boyce says.

“Our Group Training Organisation offers a hassle-free flexible recruitment option to businesses wishing to utilise an apprentice,” Mr Boyce says.

Apprenticeships offered include plumbing, electrical, electronics, refrigeration and data communications. Traineeships also are offered in security installation and office administration. PEER VEET is well placed to meet the training needs of industry through its diverse range of services.

Over the past 12 months, the Registered Training Organisation has trained more than 3000 students, made up of present apprentices, VET students and tradespeople wanting to upskill in a particular field.

PEER VEET has many success stories, including the 2007 SA Small Training Provider of the Year Award. It also has been awarded a three-gold-star rating as part of the Institute for Trade Skills Excellence scheme.

PEER VEET apprentices also received industry awards, including NECA 2008 National Apprentice of the Year Runner Up – Electrical, Jonathan Welch, and NECA 2008 State Apprentice Award 1st Place – Data Communications, Philip Rump.
